SUMMARY

Land administration entails the proper allocation and use of land resources for benefit to man. It requires the use of the right techniques to solve challenges faced as a result of man's activity on land and to protect the environment for future generations. Man's activity has positive or negative effects on our ecosystem. The sustainability of our ecosystem through land use policies and sustainable resource management techniques is a necessity and as such efficient financial management techniques is needed in responsible land administration. The value of land can be appreciated and its resources can be sustained to meet up for the growing demand for the use of land. This study aims to emphasize the impact of finance and what benefits would be derived from proper financial appraisal in land administration and management.
